Acting upon this suggestion of his own mind, he put a 22-calibre revolver in his pocket last night and proceeded to carry the usual midnight lunch to his father, who is an engineer in the browery. While on his way he reached in his pocket to take out some tobacco to fill his pipe. In some unaccountable manner the pistol exploded, and a builet passed through his hand, singlying one of the metacarpal bones. A call was sent for the ambulance, and Dr. Mason responded. The physician bound up the wounded hand, and left the hoy with his father.
